

Guidelines for Learning Journal

As mentioned during our Admin Lecture, you need to maintain a Learning Journal throughout the entire semester for all your non-graded studios. Your Teaching Assistants will be monitoring your Learning Journals to ensure that you have been updating it every studio.

Note that we will be using Microsoft Teams for the Learning Journal.

In the following, we provide some guidelines and suggestions about what you could include in your Learning Journal:

- Note down your observations, calculations and any measurements you make during the activities in a timely manner, i.e., take notes as and when you are performing an activity.
- You may also jot down important formulae or concepts you have learnt during a studio for your reference.
- Answer all questions that are asked in the studio handouts.
- Reflect on your learning experience for the studio succinctly.
- You can summarize the key learning points from the studio for your review later.
- Everyone makes mistakes. However, it is important to acknowledge them and learn from them to improve ourselves for the future. So, it would be good if you could reflect on any mistakes that you may have committed unintentionally.
- You may also write about an activity or experiment that you felt was challenging. How would you do it differently next time?
